

EDITORIAL

We present a variety of research contributions in this issue 36, number 3, which concludes the publications of 2016 from the Goiano Bulletin of Geography. This variety expresses itself in two ways. First for the themes, and second for the authors' institution of origin. This has been a characteristic adopted in our editorial policies. In this edition, prestigious researchers contributed with original researches about several themes, such as teaching of geography, organization of industrial space, organization systems of urban centers, in addition to the articles focused on environmental questions. Some articles are available in English as a way to expand the visibility of the journal.

Finally, we thank the authors for trusting and spreading, once again, the results of their researches in our journal; and the referees for evaluating the papers.
